I had not expected this (disloyalty) of them; it was not as though that party, evil as was the position it had taken up, consisted of persons who would not give ear to the words of Shāh Begum and Khānum; Mīrzā Khān was the Begum's grandson, in her presence night and day; if she had not fallen in with the affair, she could have kept him with her.

Twice over when fickle Fortune and discordant Fate had parted me from throne and country, retainer and following, I, and my mother with me, had taken refuge with them and had had no kindness soever from them. At that time my younger brother (i.e., cousin) Mīrzā Khān and his mother Sulṭān-nigār Khānum held valuable cultivated districts; yet my mother and I, —to leave all question of a district aside, —were not made possessors of a single village or a few yokes of plough-oxen. Was my mother not Yūnas Khān's daughter? Was I not his grandson?

In my days of plenty I have given from my hand what matched the blood-relationship and the position of whatsoever member of that (Chaghatāī) dynasty chanced down upon me. For example, when the honored Shāh Begum came to me, I gave her Pamghān, one of the best places in Kābul, and failed in no sort of filial duty and service towards her. Again, when Sulṭān Sa'īd Khān, Khān in Kāshghar, came (914 AH) with five or six naked followers on foot, I looked upon him as an honored guest and gave him Mandrāwar of the Lamghān tūmāns. Beyond this also, when Shāh Ismā'īl had killed Shaybāni Khān in Marv and I crossed over to Qūndūz (916 AH-1511 AD), the Andijānīs, some driving their (Aūzbeg) dāroghas out, some making their places fast, turned their eyes to me and sent me a man; at that time I trusted those old family servants to that same Sulṭān Sa'īd Khān, gave him a force, made him Khān and sped him forth. Again, down to the present time (circa 934 AH) I have not looked upon any member of that family who has come to me, in any other light than as a blood-relation. For example, there are now in my service Chīn-tīmūr Sulṭān; Aīsān-tīmūr Sulṭān, Tūkhtā-būghā Sulṭān, and Bābā Sulṭān;[31] on one and all of these I have looked with more favor than on blood-relations of my own.

I do not write this in order to make complaint; I have written the plain truth. I do not set these matters down in order to make known my own deserts; I have set down exactly what has happened. In this History I have held firmly to it that the truth should be reached in every matter, and that every act should be recorded precisely as it occurred. From this it follows of necessity that I have set down of good and bad whatever is known, concerning father and elder brother, kinsman and stranger; of them all I have set down carefully the known virtues and defects. Let the reader accept my excuse; let the reader pass on from the place of severity!

Babur sent letters of victory to all the countries, clans and retainers. Then he and his men rode to the citadel.

The time had come for Babur to catch hold of those whom he considered rebels. He heard that Muhammad Ḥussayn Mīrzā had run into the Khānum's bedroom and had fastened himself into the bundle of bedding. Babur appointed Mīrīm Dīwān along with some important begs of the fort to capture Ḥussayn Mīrzā. Mīrīm Dīwān rushed into the place shouting abusive words and got hold of the hiding Ḥussayn Mīrzā. He was brought in front of Babur in the citadel.

Babur has claimed to be generous in these circumstances. According to Baburnama, he rose at once to receive the Mīrzā. He showed the usual
