> By way of favor, we did not take the Fifth from Qāsim Beg and some others. From what was written down, the Fifth came out at 16,000, that is to say, this 16,000 was the fifth of 80,000 sheep; no question however but that with those lost and those not asked for, a lakh (100,000) of sheep had been taken.

The very next day, they rode out of the camp and formed a hunting circle on the plain of Kattawāz, where there were abundant fat deer and wild ass. They were killed in droves. Babur ran after a wild ass and shot an arrow as he got close, but it did not hit the target. He kept shooting, but the animal didn't stop despite being wounded twice. However, it had slowed down. Babur ran closer and hacked it at the scruff of its neck behind the ears and chopped through the windpipe. The ass paused and died turning over right then. As Babur has explained, this wild ass was a fatter one and its rib may be close to the length of a yard. Babur shot many other wild asses too. Finally, all those hunted wild asses and were brought down at a place and Babur observed that none were as fat as his first kill.

With the raid and hunt done, Babur along with his men set out to Kābul.

Shaybāni Khān Moves to Khurāsān

Bad times for Babur were set to begin again. His old foe, Shaybāni Khān had got an army to horses at the end of last year to go from Samarkand against Khurāsān. But his march hastened a bit as a servant of Shāh Manṣūr (in Andikhūd) came to Shaybāni Khān. Babur has described Shāh Manṣūr as a traitor to salt, a vile wretch who said, 'I have sent a man to the Aūzbeg,' when the Khān was approaching Andikhūd. Relying on the words of Shāh Manṣūr, he bejewelled himself, stuck up a tassel on his head, and went out, bearing gift and tribute. But then the leaderless Aūzbegs decanted down on him from all the sides, and turned him upside down, ravishing not only his people but also the offerings of all sorts.

Vacillation of the Khurāsān Mīrzās

Along with their army, Badī'u'z-zamān Mīrzā, Muẓaffar Mīrzā, Muḥammad Barandūq Barlās and Ẕū'n-nūn Arghūn were lying in Bābā Khākī. They had neither decided to fight nor settled to secure the fort of Herī. They sat lazily, baffled, equivocal and certainly uncertain about the next step. But among all, Muhammad Barandūq Barlās was thinking otherwise and in Babur's opinion he appeared to be a knowledgeable man.
