a) Mīrzā Khān (Wais) who post defeat in Kābul had been allowed to go into Khurāsān.
b) ‘Abdu’r-razzāq Mīrzā who had stayed on in Khurāsān when Babur had left.

As a surprise, the mother of Jahāngīr Mīrzā’s son Pīr-i-Muḥammad, (a grandson of Pahār Mīrzā) had come with them and waited on Babur[36]. Then Babur sent a messenger with letters to Shāh Beg and Muqīm:[*]

> Here we are at your word; a stranger-foe like the Aūzbeg has taken Khurāsān; come! let us settle, in concert and amity, what will be for the general good.

But their actions were in total discord with the letter of invitation to Babur. They were ill-mannered and rude as Babur has stated. To show the vulgarity (as Babur has said) Shāh Beg stamped his letter to Babur in the middle of its reverse.[37] Perhaps he would have forgotten all their ill manners and rude answers, but there was something which prevented Babur from doing so. He quotes the below line with this context in Baburnama:

> A strife-stirring word will accomplish the downfall of an ancient line.

Babur says that they acted shabbily towards households, families and the hordes for around four decades.

Babur and his men moved on to Guzar steadily.[38] Babur again tried for a deliberate truce with the Arghūns. But they paid no heed. Now he was sure that the battle was inevitable. The very next day Babur asked his men to array for the war and put on their mail. Beautifully arrayed on right and left, they marched for Qandahār.

The Battle of Qandahār

Shāh Beg and Muqīm had seated themselves under an awning set in front of the maze of the Qandahār hill. It was the same place where Babur had a rock residence carved out. Muqīm’s men pushed forward through the array of trees. There was one ṭūfān Arghūn, who was known to be a close ally of Babur’s enemy. He had fled to join Babur’s army when they were near Shahr-i-ṣafā. He knew quite a few secrets which would help Babur in this battle.

One ‘Ashaqu’l-lāh was briskly leading eight soldiers. They were all prepared to bring all troubles to Babur. But ṭūfān joined the party. He took on ‘Ashaqu’l-
