were Sher Beg, Ḥātim the Armoury-master, Kūpuk, Qulī Bābā, Abū'l-ḥasan the armourer;—of the Moghūls, Aūrūs (Russian) ʻAlī Sayyid, Darwīsh-i-ʻalī Sayyid, Khūsh-kīldī, Chilma, Dost-kīldī, Chilma Tāghchī, Dāmāchī, Mindī;—of the Turkmāns, Manṣūr, Rustam-i-ʻalī with his elder and younger brother, and Shāh Nāẓir and Sīūndūk.

The enemy was in two divisions, one under Shāh Shujā' Arghūn, known as Shāh Beg and hereafter to be written of simply as Shāh Beg, the other under his younger brother Muqīm.

Some estimated the dark mass of Arghūns at 6 or 7000 men; no question whatever but that Shāh Beg's own men in mail were 4 or 5000. He faced our right, Muqīm with a force smaller may-be than his brother's, faced our left. Muqīm made a mightily strong attack on our left, that is on Qāsim Beg from whom two or three persons came before fighting began, to ask for reinforcement; we however could not detach a man because in front of us also the enemy was very strong.

Babur and his men commenced the attack without any delay. The Arghūn enemies fell suddenly on Babur's van. They turned it back and bumped it into their centre. The enemy shot many arrows. As soon as the first phase of arrows ended, Babur and his men advanced. Just then a man came in front of Babur, dismounted and targeted him with his arrow. Babur moved briskly and thwarted the move. The man's many attempts failed and he rode back pushing away. Babur felt that it was probably Shāh Beg himself.

The battle was turning intense with each passing moment. During the fight, Pīrī Beg Turkmān[40] and five of his brethren surrendered and turned their faces from the foe with a turban in hand. They were now against Babur.

Babur was a bit anxious with the prevailing situation, and he knew very well that whatever it may take the first thing was to overcome the foe. The battle had intensified, leaving Babur extremely exhausted. On the left, Babur's troops had gone as far as the irrigation channel surrounded by a tangle of trees. Muqīm was positioned on the opposite end with more men than Babur.

Babur has mentioned in the Baburnama that what Allah did was right.

Around three or four tree-tangled water channels flowing towards Qandahār lay between Babur's troop and Muqīm. They were exactly at crossings and allowed no passage at all. Ḥalwāchī Tarkhān went in the water with Tīngrī-bīrdī and Qaṃbar-i-'alī who had got wounded. An arrow stuck Qāsim Beg's forehead while it hit Ghūrī Barlās just above the eyebrow that came out of his cheek. Babur has said that despite massive losses his army was giving a good fight. They had crossed those channels towards the maze of Murghān-koh (Birds' hill). Babur saw someone running away on a grey tīpūchāq along the skirt of the hill. He again thought that it was Shāh Beg.

Babur's men fought well and beat their opponents despite the weaker initial odds. Most of them were unhorsed. Not many were left on Babur's side either. Babur counted them to be eleven, including ʻAbdu'l-lāh the librarian. Babur
