Nāṣir's Mīrīm and Maqṣūd to keep the house of Ẕū'n-nūn's Dīwān Mīr Jān for Nāṣir Mīrzā. The house of Shaikh Abū-sa'īd Tarkhānī was kept for Mīrzā Khān and one house[41] was also kept for 'Abdu'r-razzāq Mīrzā.

There was no trace of any money, and no one had any clue as such. That very night, when Babur and his men stayed in the citadel, Shāh Beg's slave Saṃbhal was captured and brought in. Babur handed him over to someone as a slave. But as no one kept a watch on him, he managed to escape. The next day, Babur rode back to his camp in Farrukh-zād Beg's Chārbāgh.

Having finished the battle, Babur had to set the administration right. He handed over the country of Qandahār to Nāṣir Mīrzā. The treasures had been set in order and loaded in the carriages. Nāṣir Mīrzā carried loads of white tankas off a string of camels at the citadel treasury to keep them. Babur has mentioned that he did not demand it back and just gave it to him.

Having conquered Qandahār, Babur moved out. He and his troops dismounted in the meadows of Qūsh-khāna. He let his army rest after the long battle. Babur went for an excursion. When he returned to the camp, he found it unrecognizable. It seemed like another camp. The spoils from the battle had completely transformed it. He has described it as follows:[*]

> It was another camp! not to be recognized! Excellent tīpūchāqs, strings and strings of he-camels, she-camels, and mules, bearing saddlebags (khurzīn) of silken stuffs and cloth, —tents of scarlet (cloth) and velvet, all sorts of awnings, every kind of workshop, ass-load after ass-load of chests! The goods of the elder and younger (Arghūn) brethren had been kept in separate treasuries; out of each had come chest upon chest, bale upon bale of stuffs and `clothes-in-wear (artmāq artmāq), sack upon sack of white tankas. In aūtāgh and chādar (lattice-tent and pole-tent) was much spoil for every man soever; many sheep also had been taken but sheep were less cared about!

Babur handed over everything to Qāsim Beg Muqīm's retainers in Qalāt, namely Qūj Arghūn and Tāju'd-dīn Maḥmūd, all their goods and spoils. Babur knew Qāsim Beg very well and as a wise one, he continually advised Babur to stay longer near Qandahār. Babur finally marched away. Now that Babur had bestowed Qandahār on Nāṣir Mīrzā he was permitted to go there while Babur cruised for Kābul.

Babur has mentioned that since there was no point in distributing the spoils near Qandahār,[42] it was done at the Qarā-bāgh. Babur was delayed there for a couple of days as it was important to not move ahead without getting the measure of the spoils they had got. Since they had got hold of a huge number of coins it wasn't going to be feasible to count them and hence, they were apportioned by weighing them in scales. The households, retainers and the begs