Autumn arrived and with it, the rice was harvested by the lowlanders.

It was late in the autumn; most lowlanders had carried in their rice. He was informed by the local people that the Kafirs[46] living up the water of the ‘Alīshang tūmān grew massive quantity of rice. Babur thought that it would be a great idea to collect rice for winter supplies for his army from there. Thus, Babur rode out of the Nangarhār-dale crossed the Bārān River at Sāīkal. They rode very swiftly and reached as far as Pūramīn Valley, the place which was full of rice cultivation located at the bottom of hill. Babur’s soldiers collected a huge mass of rice after threatening the Kafirs. Most ran away without resistance, and those who resisted were put to death. Babur had sent out a few men to look out on a maze of the Pūranīm valley. While they were making a return, a few Kafirs rushed from the hill above and began to shoot arrows endlessly. In this fight, Qāsim Beg’s son-in-law Pūrān fell prey. They attacked him with an axe but few of Babur’s men stood and helped him flee to save his life. Somehow, they were able to cope with the situation and spent the night in the rice fields of Kafirs. The next day, they returned to the camp collecting a huge mass of provisions looted from the Kafir’s properties.

Babur had reached all the way till Mandrāwar only to realize that it was not desirable to go into Hindustan at that time. Babur has not mentioned the detailed reason for abandoning his mission.

He sent Mullā Bābā of Pashāghar along with a few men back to Kābul and he marched to Atar and Shīwa where he stayed for a few days. He then visited Kūnār and Nūr-gal. From Kūnār he went back to camp riding on a raft. Babur was extremely pleased sitting on a raft:[*]

> It was the first time I had sat on one; it pleased me much, and the raft came into common use thereafter.

Shaybāni Khān Leaves Qandahār

While Babur had abandoned his plan for Hindustan, Mullā Bābā of Farkat arrived with some news. Shaybāni Khān had not been able to take the citadel despite taking the outer fort of Qandahār and he chose to retire. He also brought the news that Nasir Mīrzā had gone to Ghaznī after leaving Qandahār.

Shaybāni Khān’s arrived in Qandahār just a few days after Babur had departed. It was so shocking that the garrison couldn’t even attempt to secure the outer fort. He took it away but his all attempts to take control of the citadel kept failing although he assaulted the place using mines multiple times. But
