All such as fire is but their heads upraised

In hate, as rises its smoke in the azure sky,

Ant-like they come from right and from left,

Thousands and thousands of horse and foot.

They advanced towards the victorious encampment, intending to give battle. The holy warriors of Islām, trees in the garden of valor, moved forward in ranks straight as serried pines and, like pines uplift their crests to heaven, uplifting their helmet-crests which shone even as shine the hearts of those that strive in the way of the Lord; their array was like Alexander's iron-wall, and, as is the way of the Prophet's Law, straight and firm and strong, as though they were a well-compacted building; and they became fortunate and successful in accordance with the saying, They are directed by their Lord, and they shall prosper.

In that array no rent was frayed by timid souls;

Firm was it as the Shāhanshāh's resolve, strong as the Faith;

Their standards brushed against the sky;

Verily we have granted thee certain victory.

Obeying the cautions of prudence, we imitated the ghāzīs of Rūm by posting matchlockmen (tufanchīān) and cannoneers (ra'd-andāzān) along the line of carts which were chained to one another in front of us; in fact, Islām's army was so arrayed and so steadfast that primal Intelligence and the firmament ('aql-i-pīr u charkh-i-aṣīr) applauded the marshalling thereof. To affect this arrangement and organization, Niẓāmu'd-dīn 'Alī Khalīfa, the pillar of the Imperial fortune, exerted himself strenuously; his efforts were in accord with Destiny, and were approved by his sovereign's luminous judgment.

History is an open book. Babur's tale is available—with primary sources—for consumption in an easy way. I hope that the next volume will bring forth a lot more information about the founder of the so-called Moghūl Empire.