Moghūls). In fact, the world GDP share of Hindustan fell below China for the first time drastically in AD 1600 when Akbar was the ruler. The fall of GDP following the Tīmūrid period shall never recover in future. This is also true that the fall was massive during the era of British colonialism and despite being lower than in the earlier period the GDP share was almost neutral throughout the Tīmūrid period. But does it mean that people were richer during the Tīmūrid colonialism than those in British Colonialism? The answer can be obtained from table A.4.
