7. Items of gold-hilted Hindī knives (kārd).
8. Fifty-one pieces of purpet.

It is very clearly established from Babur's writing that he was on a campaign to drain away the Indian wealth as he could for the benefit of his people who certainly were not Indians.

One thing remained constant throughout the reign—the investments of Hajj. On average, around 15,000 pilgrims visited Mecca annually to perform Hajj during the Tīmūrid (distorted as Moghūls) era. The official Tīmūrid records tell us that the Tīmūrids sponsored the pilgrimage at public expense with gold, goods and rich presents merely with the desire to stand out as defenders of Islam. The major sponsorship began with the period of Abu'l-Fath Jalal-ud-din Muhammad Akbar when he conquered Gujarat in AD 1573. This victory had given him access to the port of Surat. An imperial proclamation in this regard stated:[*]

> The traveling expenses of anybody who might intend to perform the pilgrimage to the Sacred Places should be paid.

According to Wollebrant Geleynssen, it was in AD 1576, that a Hajj caravan under the Tīmūrid (distorted as Moghūls) patronage left Agra with a huge donation amount of Rs 6 lakh. I do not have records of this time but for AD 1637, the daily wages were as follows:[†]
