Beg, hurried down from Qūndūz to contribute to Babur's victory. Many of the rioters were killed in the conflict, and others fled to Kāshghar. Sherīm ṭaghāī was among those who fled, and since he received no welcome from Sa'īd Khān, he could not stay in Kāshghar. He eventually sought refuge with Babur, who, as Haidar notes, displayed his customary benevolence. Babur chose to overlook Sherīm ṭaghāī's past offences and focused on his prior services. Sherīm ṭaghāī, however, passed away shortly thereafter.[*] [13]

During this year, Babur may have spent his time in and around Kābul, benefiting from the tranquillity that followed the dispersion of the Moghūls. In the same year, Babur's son Muḥammad, known as 'Askarī because of his birth in a camp, was born. He was the son of Gulrukh Begchīk and the full brother of Kāmrān.

a) Babur visits Balkh

Khwānd-amīr provides some insights into Babur's actions during this year, particularly related to the activities of Badī'u'z-zamān Bāī-qarā's son, Muḥammad-i-zamān. Muḥammad-i-zamān had experienced significant wanderings, during a portion of which Khwānd-amīr was in his company.[†] In AD 1514, he was in the service of Shāh Ismā'īl and stationed in Balkh, but he was unable to maintain control of the city.

Babur invited Muḥammad-i-zamān to come to Kābul, and this invitation likely occurred after Babur's return to Kābul at the end of AD 1514. However, while on his way to Kābul, Muḥammad-i-zamān was dissuaded from entering the city by Mahdī Khwāja. Instead, he redirected his journey to Ghurjistān. Babur, annoyed by Muḥammad-i-zamān's failure to arrive, pursued him with the intention of punishing him. However, Babur was unable to reach Ghurjistān and returned to Kābul via Fīrūz-koh and Ghūr.

Ultimately, Muḥammad-i-zamān was captured and brought to Kābul. Babur treated him kindly, and after a few months, he arranged a marriage between Muḥammad-i-zamān and his daughter Ma'ṣūma. Subsequently, he sent Muḥammad-i-zamān to rule in Balkh. According to Khwānd-amīr, the events related to Muḥammad-i-zamān occurred in AD 1523. The marriage likely took place either at the end of AD 1517 or the beginning of AD 1518 when Muḥammad-i-zamān was 21 and Ma'ṣūma was 9. It is highly unlikely that
