such a name for its ability to reflect things like a mirror. It was almost of a man's height but with a bend in the centre. We do not have much idea about this stone except for Babur's sparse descriptions. The Esfara district was one among the four sub-divisions in the hill country. The remaining three were: Varuk, Sukh and Hushyar. Babur stayed in Sukh and the hill country of Hushyar for a year (AD 1503–1504) after Muhammad Shaybāni[12] defeated the sons of Yunus Khān: Sulṭān Mahmud Khān and Ahmad Alaq. This defeat had cost them Tashkent and Shahrukhiya. Babur mentions this as the period of misery till he took over Kābul.

Below is a brief description of the relationship between the house of Yunus and Umar Shaikh:

> Sulṭān Yunus Khān was the Chagatai Mughal Khān of Mughalistan from AD 1462 until he died in 1487. He is identified by many historians with Ḥājjī `Ali of the contemporary Chinese records.[*] He was a direct male descendent of Genghis Khān, through his son Chagatai Khān and was the maternal grandfather of Babur.[†]
> He was actively involved in the affairs of the Tīmūrids in his western frontier. He made a marriage alliance with the most prominent Tīmūrid Sulṭāns. He married off his daughters Mihr Nigar Khānum, Qutlugh Nigar Khānum and Sulṭān Nigar Khānum to Sulṭān Ahmad Mīrzā, Umar Shaikh Mīrzā II and Sulṭān Mahmud Mīrzā respectively in AD 1475. Sulṭān Nigar Khānum gave birth to Babur and Shaikh Vais Mīrzā respectively. Yunus maintained convivial terms with Umar Shaikh. Umar relied on him for assistance against Sulṭān Ahmad and in return gave him territory to reside in during the winters. In AD 1484, Yunus Khān captured Tashkent taking advantage of the conflict between Sulṭān Ahmad and Umar Shaikh. He planned to stay in Tashkent, but it did dismay the Mūghals. Ahmad Alaq, lead people to leave Mūghalistan. In AD 1487, Yunus Khān died in Tashkent after suffering from a long illness. He was succeeded in Tashkent by his eldest son, Sulṭān Mahmud Khān, while the Mūghals in the east (Uyghurstan) followed Ahmad Alaq.

> Sulṭān Mahmud Khān had a task at his hands. He had to defend Tashkent from the Tīmūrids of Samarkand and Ferghana, who begrudged the loss of the city to his father Yunus Khān. He was successful in nullifying their efforts to take Tashkent. During his fight with Sulṭān Ahmad, the Uzbek Muhammad Shaybāni, an Ahmad's man defected. This appeared very pleasing to Mahmud Khān, and he rewarded Muhammad Shaybāni by giving him Turkistan in AD 1488. Perhaps he wasn't aware of the political foolishness that he had committed. This resulted in him losing a long-time ally in the Kazakhs who were traditional enemies of the Uzbeks. The war became inevitable and when Mūghals and Kazakhs went to war, Mahmud Khān stands defeated. His military prestige well known in the region had gone for a toss.
