was already a Buddhist when he attacked Kalinga. In contrast, Charles Allen uses them to build the case otherwise. Moreover, if one reads the inscription (e.g., 1st Minor Edict of Maski) then it becomes very clear that during the Kalinga War, Ashoka was already a Buddhist. It can be understood from the fact that Maski Edict is dated to 260 BC wherein Ashoka claims to have been a lay-Buddhist for almost two and a half years (Hultzsch, 1925), and the Kalinga War had occurred only one year back (in 261 BC). Moreover, Charles Allen has concluded that Ashoka converted to Buddhism in 265 BC (based on reading of other edicts of Ashoka).

4 A.B. Scott writes on effect of British Education, 'The rise of a class of young prigs for whom it became the done thing to denigrate everything Indian in an attempt at blind imitation of the customs and attitudes of western people.' (Scott, 1973)

5 The post-modernism has penetrated deep into the architecture school, and works around it along with modernism inspire students at best. Especially, the architecture of India in the era of post-Independence was pretty much dictated by the whims and fancies of Le-Corbusier. The case-studies needed for pursuing design projects often takes people to the literature of modernism, post-modernism and then to the root of movements, Marxism. For example, I began to read about post-modernism, and ended up with Cultural Marxism.

The faculties across the universities and schools of architecture have been observing same off late (Kemper, 2018).

6 There have been long discussions by the Marxist School of Historiography to paint (Truschke, 2020) the uncovering of indigenous stories of Bharat as project of errors coloured by some political ideologies (Mukherjee, et al., 2001).

7 These thoughts on how the very journey to the great Ajanta and Ellora began my transformation, leaving away the cloak of communism elaborated in Modi Again: An Ex-Communist's Manifesto.

8 Being illusioned towards the wisdom, and valour of people in India from ancient times. I lived with the view that ancient India was the place of superstition and had been invaded continually after Steppe Aryans. I could never find the tale, which told, if ever we won a battle against any invader? I had firmly begun to believe that the traditions my parents want me to practice are icons of superstitions, somewhere passed on by the Aryan inavders.

Needless to say, as explained earlier (refer footnote 3) the Marxist historiography did have an impact on how I thought about history.

9 Primary sources are the raw materials of history—original documents and objects that were created at the time under study. They are different from