secondary sources, accounts that retell, analyse, or interpret events, usually at a distance of time or place (Congress).

10 I read the works Das Kapital and The Communist Manifesto, but neither had any such views about British Imperialism in India.

11 One may claim that there were always History books written by scholars like Jadunath Sarkar and R.C. Majumdar. But then we must not forget the fact that for a youth like me, who had chosen to bid a goodbye to history post school, the inputs of the NCERT books were the only tool to draw an impression about our history. At the same time, we are also aware about how systematically historians who did not yield to the lines of Nehruvian ideology for Historiography were shown way out (Balakrishna).

12 Details of Jalal-ud-din Muhammad (Akbar) would be dealt with in details with successive books from the series dealing with him. Though as of now to get current context, it would be suggestive for the people to go through Fatehnama-i-Chittor (an annotated translation, 1971).

13 The recent work of Sanjeev Sanyal on Revolutionaries (Sanyal, 2023) along with Vikram Sampath's works on Savarkar (Sampath, 2021) brings forth the fact that Bharat didn't win its independence only by passive Gandhian Movement.

14 The attempts were continually made to whitewash the atrocities committed by the Islamic Invaders (Maldahiyar, 2022) and the other East India Companies (Portuguese and Dutch).

15 Babur recognized himself as Tīmūrid as his father's lineage was from the line of Timur. In earlier sections brief premise has been given in footnotes that how the history of atrocities was whitewashed even though American Historian, Will Durant observed, Mohammadian conquest of India to be bloodiest (Durant, 1954).

16 As an example, I quote Babur from Baburnama as he writes in relation to his conquest of Chandiri. He writes (Babur):

> Chandiri I stormed in 934 A.H. (1528 A.D.) and, by God's pleasure, took it in a few hours; in it was Rana Sanga's great and trusted man Midni Rao, we made general massacre of the Pagans in it and, as will be narrated, converted what for many years had been a mansion of hostility, into a mansion of Islam.

17 Firoz Shah Tuglaq says (Afif, 1871):

> 'The next matter which by God's help I accomplished, was the repetition of names and titles of former sovereigns which had been omitted from the prayers of Sabbaths and Feasts. The names of those sovereigns of Islam, under whose happy fortune and favour infidel countries had been conquered, whose banners had waved over many a land, under whom idol-temples had been demolished, and mosques and pulpits built and exalted, the fragrant
