Because of his distinguished Chagatai language poetry, Nava'i is considered by many throughout the Turkic-speaking world to be the founder of early Turkic literature. Many places and institutions in Central Asia are named after him.

6 Osh is the second largest city in Kyrgyzstan, located in the Fergana Valley in the south of the country and often referred to as the 'capital of the south'. It is estimated to be the oldest city in the country with the history of more than three millenniums. The city has an ethnically mixed population of about 2,81,900 in 2017, comprising Uzbeks, Kyrgyz, Russians, Tajiks, and other smaller ethnic groups. It is about 5 km from the Uzbekistan border.

7 Historically Bara-Kuh has several names like, The Sulaiman-Too, The Sulaiman Tagh, and The Takhti-Suleimen. In the time when Babur lived, it was commonly known by its Persian name The Bara-Kukh. The name literally meant separately standing or a beautiful mountain. By around the ending years of thirteenth century, the name had received some distortions and was called, The Barak. According to the Chinese narratives 'a town at a highly respected mountain' existed in the first half of 1st millennium AD. It was known as Guishan-chane and has been identified by some researchers to be located exactly in the Osh city. According to Arabic sources of seventeenth century, Prophet Sulaiman (Biblical Solomon) stayed on this mountain.

8 Margilan is a city in Fergana Region of eastern Uzbekistan. It is elevated at 487 meters, located at the crossing of trade caravans from China to the west and vice versa (in a picturesque square). Margilan's root is in close association with the Silk Road opening. While it is not considered to be the birthplace of the city, but the Silk Road was the head keeper of its secrets for Margilan. Margilan was renowned for their silk goods from far west to far east as far back as the tenth century—the largest city in the Ferghana Valley.

According to European legend, Margilan was founded by Alexander. On a lunch stop, he was given chicken (murgh; in Persian ) and bread (nan; in Persian), from which the town took its name. More reliable records indicate that Margilan was an important stop on the Silk Road by the ninth century AD, along the route going across the Alay Mountains to Kashgar.

9 Located on the alluvial fan of the Golrubar Creek in central Iran, Semnan happens to be the the capital city of the Semnan Province.It lies 216 km east of Tehran and 640 km west of Mashhad. It is habitat of a population of around 185, 129 people, and is considered the populous most city in the province. On an interesting note, the city is hub of the Samnani language, a sub-branch of the Caspian languages spoken to the north, and home to the Samnani ethnic group.