with that army to take care of his brother Esen. As perceived by Abu Sa'id, Yunus Khān's ties of kinship and claim to tribal leadership proved great advantages. It wasn't too late before he gained the support of several emirs. He got in matrimonial tie with an Emir, Mir Pir Haji Kunji's family. He married his daughter, Isan Daulat Begum. She is believed to be his first wife although he was already above forty by then. She becomes mother to Yunus' three daughters:

1. Mihr Nigar Khānim (born, 1457), wife of Sultan Ahmed Mīrzā. He was the son of Abu Sa'id.
2. Qutlugh Nigar Khānum (born, 1459), wife of Umar Shaikh Mīrzā II. He wa son of Abu Sa'id.
3. Khub Nigar Khānum (born, AD 1463), after Yunus died, her half-brother ma her to Muhammad Hussain Mīrzā Kurkan. She was Mother of Mīrzā Muhan Haidar Dughlat, a future ruler of Kashmir.

Esen had an ally named Emir Sayyid Ali of Kashgar. He died in the year Yunus' first daughter was born. Following which Ali's son Saniz Mīrzā looked to get help of Yunus in gaining power at Kashgar. Yunus Khān gracefully accepted the invitation and arrived in Kashgar. Shortly, he sent one of the most respectable Sayyids of Kashgar, Amir Zia-ud-Din, to Badakhshan to meet Shah Sultan Muhammad Badakhshi and seek one of his six daughters in marriage. Shah Sultan Muhammad Badakhshi was deemed to be a direct descendant of Iskandar Zulkarnain (Alexander the Great), son of Filikus Rumi (Phillip II of Macedon), who according to (dubious) legend left one of his sons in the isolated mountain country out of reach of rivals in hope that his progeny would continue his dynasty in the East. Shah Sultan Muhammad Badakhshi agreed to marry one of his daughters to Yunus Khān. After a year to this marriage, Yunus married fourth daughter of Badakhshi, Shah Begum. With the relevant practice in region of that time, Yunus beginning to marry post forty years of his age indicates of unsettledness. His consciousness of royal birth would have prevented him from accepting wives from commoner's family. Yunus Khān fathered two sons and two daughters by Shah Begum:

1. Sultan Mahmud Khān, eldest child by Shah Begum, born in AD 1462.
2. Sultan Ahmad Khān, second son, known later as Alacha (Slayer) Khān for h brutal attempts to bring down absolute power in the steppe by slaughtering t Kalmaks.
3. Sultan Nigar Khānim, wife of Sultan Mahmud Mīrzā, third son of Abu Sa'id
4. Daulat Sultan Khānim, youngest sibling.
