12 Shah Rukh or Shahrukh was the ruler of the Timurid Empire between AD 1405 and 1447. He was youngest son of the Timur, who founded the Timurid dynasty in AD 1370. Shahrukh ruled only over the eastern portion of the empire established by his father that comprised most of Persia and Transoxiana. The western territories were lost to the invaders in the aftermath of Timur's death. Despite this, Shahrukh's empire remained a cohesive dominion of considerable extent throughout his reign, as well as a dominant power in Asia.

He had an absolute control of the main trade routes between Asia and Europe, including the great Silk Road, which in turn made him immensely wealthy. Unlike his father he chose Herat as his capital, though Timur's capital was in Samarkand. This was to become the political centre of the Timurid empire and residence of his principal successors, though both cities benefited from the wealth and privilege of Shahrukh's court.

He is said to be a great patron of the arts and sciences, and it flourished well under his rule. He spent his reign focusing on the stability of his lands, as well as maintaining political and economic relations with neighbouring kingdoms.
