Musa Qala itself & 60 kilometres north of the city of Grishk in eastern Helmand was the primary town (Griesbach, 1911).

3 Ghazi Mohammad Ayub Khan was born in 1857 and died in April 1914. He is also known as The Victor of Maiwand or The Afghan Prince Charlie. His was born to Amir of Afghanistan Sher Ali Khan, and his mother was the daughter of Saadat Khan, an influential Mohmand chief of Lalpura (Chisholm, 1911). He had a brother named Mohammad Yaqub Khan who too would become Amir of Afghanistan (Frank Clements, 2003).

He was the governor of Herat Province in the Emirate of Afghanistan for sometimes. He became Emir of Afghanistan from 12 October 1879, to May 31, 1880, (htt6) (htt7). He successfully led the Afghan troops at Maiwand during the Second Anglo-Afghan War crushing the British Army. But a defeat came to him at the Battle of Kandahar, and Ayub Khan was deposed and exiled to British India, but he didn't stich and escaped to Persia. A negotiation happened between Ayub and Sir Mortimer Durand, the ambassador at Tehran in 1988. Former became a pensioner of the British Government and travelled to India until his death in Lahore, Punjab (Dupree, 2014) and he would be buried in Peshawar. He had eleven wives, fifteen sons, and ten daughters (htt8). Two of his grandsons, Sardar Hissam Mahmud el-Effendi and Sardar Muhammad Ismail Khan, served as brigadiers in the Pakistan Army (Rahi, 2021) (Effendi, 2007).

He is also remembered as the 'National Hero of Afghanistan', in Afghanistan.

During the second Anglo-Afghan war, Afghans under the command of Ayub Khan defeated the British troops at Maiwand on 27 July of AD 1880, emerging victorious. This victory was quite significant for Afghanistan as it rescued her from getting dismembered by Britain and saved Kandahar from a permanent British occupation.

Later Ayub Khan would unsuccessfully go on to besiege the better equipped British forces at Kandahar. 1 September of AD 1880, the British force led by General Fredrick Roberts defeated Afghan forces badly at the Battle of Kandahar, which shall be the end of the Second Anglo-Afghan War (Chisholm, 1911). In 1881, Ayub yet again tried to take Kandahar, this time from Amir Abdur Rahman Khan, but again failed.

4 The Battle of Ahmed Khel was fought on 19 April 1880, during the Second Anglo-Afghan War. It occurred on the road that connected Kandahar and Kābul in central Afghanistan. The command of Kābul was in hands of General Roberts and situation had begun to turn weaker at his end. To reinforce General, with a force of 7,200 Lieutenant General Donald Stewart began his march from