Kandahar to Kābul on 27 March 1980. While they marched, Afghan Tribesmen shadowed them throughout making it one of the most uphill tasks.

On 19 April 1880, as the column led by Lieutenant General Donald had reached near the village of Ahmed Khel (about 23 miles from Ghazni) the road had turned quite narrow. An Afghan tribal force of about 12,000 to 15,000 placed along the hills began to shower all kinds of threat on the column's flank. Before Lieutenant General Stewart could reposition his men to respond appropriately, the mass of Afghan tribesmen began rushing over the hills and made lethal attacks. With a lot of difficulty, and a rigorous fight of around an hour, British force was successful in defeating the enemies. The casualties were higher on the Afghan side. Around 2000-3000 were killed on their side – compared with British Indian Armie's loss of 17 dead and 124 wounded. Stewart did not stop at this success and was able to take over Ghazni the next day. His march to Kābul continued without much resistance.

The news of victory reached General Roberts and ordered a Royal salute firing in Kābul proclaiming the much-needed victory, 'that it might have a quieting effect on the excitement which prevailed around Kābul.' When the column began to march back to Kandahar and they reached Ahmed Khel, it was found that graves of British soldiers had been desecrated. The bones remained scattered and exposed. (Roberts, 1897)

5 Zunbil, are also known as Zhunbil, or Rutbils of Zabulistan (htt10). They were a royal dynasty who resided to the south of Hindu Kush who ruled from AD 680until the Saffarid conquest in AD 870(htt11). The Zunbil dynasty was founded by Rutbil (Turkic: Iltäbär), the elder brother of the Turk Shahi ruler (either Barha Tegin or Tegin Shah), who ruled over a Khalaj, aHephthalite kingdom from his capital in Kābul (Wink, 2002) (Petrie, 2020) (Rehman, 2006). According to al-Tabari and Tarikh-i Sistan Zunbils had Turkish troops in their service.

According to the interpretation of Chinese sources by Marquarts and de Groots in 1915, the king of Ts'ao is said to have worn a crown with a golden fish head and was related to the Sogdians. The Temple of the Zun was recognizable by a large fish skeleton on display indicating a related merchantry deity. In addition to that Marquarts states the Zunbils to have worshipped a solar deity which might have been connected to Aditya (Surya). However, according to Shōshin Kuwayama puts a hypothesis that there was a clear difference between worshipers of the Hindu god Surya and followers of Zhun. His hypothesis derives from the existence of conflict between Surya and Zhun followers, which lead to the latter to migrate southwards towards Zabulistan from Kapisa (Historical Notes on Kāpiī and Kābul, 2000).
