Chapter 13: Babur Becomes father

1 He was a Timurid poet, writer, statesman, linguist, Hanafi Maturidi mystic and a painter who was the greatest representative of Chagatai literature (Feldherr, 2012).

2 Babur has taken it from Būstān al-jāmi' li-jamī' tawārīkh al-zamān which is an Arabic chronicle from Ayyubid Syria written by someone anonymous. Most likely, it was written in Aleppo, in the years AD 1196–1197. As of now two manuscripts survive. One of them is dated to AD 14th century and is kept at Istanbul, Saray (2959) while the other one is at Oxford, Huntington (172). Although the text is corrupted in the Istanbul manuscript, the calligraphy is quite neat, and the scribe is attributed to a qāḍī named 'Imād al-Dīn al-Iṣfahānī.

3 Mentioned as note 557 in translated version of Annette Susannah Beveridge.