flight, gave birth to a son in the desert which lies between Khujand and Kand-i-badām; that Babur, not daring to tarry and the infant being too young to make the impending journey, left it under some bushes with his own girdle round it in which were things of price; that the child was found by local people and in allusion to the valuables amongst which it lay, called Altūn bīshik (golden cradle); that it received other names and was best known in later life as Kẖudāyān Sulṭān. He is said to have spent most of his life in Akhsī; to have had a son Tīngrī-yār; and to have died in 952 AH (1545 AD). His grandson Yār-i-muḥammad is said to have gone to India to relations who was descendants of Babur (JASB 1905 p. 137 H. Beveridge's art. The emperor Babur). What is against the truth of this tradition is that Gul-badan mentions no such wife as Sayyida Āfāq. Māhīm however seems to have belonged to a religious family, might therefore be styled Sayyida, and, as Bābur mentions (Baburnama, folio 220), had several children who did not live (a child left as this infant was, might if not heard of, be supposed dead). There is this opening allowed for considering the tradition.

8 Bābur refers to this on folio 265.

9 The Lubbu't-tawārīkh would fix Ramẓān 7th.

10 Mr. Erskine's quotation of the Persian original of the couplet differs from that Annette Susannah Beveridge translations (Erskine, 1854 p. 326) (Badā'ūnī, 1898 p. 543).

11 Some translators make Babur go 'naked' into the fort but, on his own authority (Folio 106b), it seems safer to understand what others say, that he went stripped of attendance, because it was always his habit even in times of peace to lie down in his tunic; much more would he have done so at such a crisis of his affairs as this of his flight to Ḥiṣār.

12 Haidar gives a graphic account of the misconduct of the horde and of their punishment (Dughlat, 1551 pp. 261-63).

13 One of the mutineers named as in this affair (Dughlat, 1551 p. 257) was Sl. Qulī chūnāq, a circumstance attracting attention by its bearing on the cause of the lacuna in the Bābur-nāma, in as much as Babur, writing at the end of his life, expresses (Baburnaama, folio 65) his intention to tell of this man's future misdeeds. These misdeeds may have been also at Ḥiṣār and in the attack there made on Babur; they are known from Haidar to have been done at Ghaznī; both times fall within this present gap. Hence it is clear that Babur meant to write of the events falling in the gap of AH 914 onwards.

14 In AH 925 (Mīr pp. 227, 238), mention is made of courtesies exchanged between Babur and Muḥammad-i-zamān in Balkh. The Mīrzā was with Babur later on in Hindustan.
