Khān. The same happened the next day and Abdul Ali, took it upon himself to throw the army into disorder, and then to take flight.[†]

Drawn up in the battle array, the Moghūl army and infantry passed the river. The Tīmūrids began to act and soon, the Moghūl cavalry too entered the scene. As thought by Sulṭān Mahmud and Shaybāni, the Moghūl Army directed its force against Mir Abdul Ali. This was the moment when Muhammad Shaybāni defected with his 3000 Aūzbegs and he began the plunder the army baggage (portable military equipment). In fact, in a very disordered rabble began to take away the baggage of the Sulṭān Ahmed Mīrzā’s army which made them to fly away from the battle. But since the Chirciq River, which the people of Tashkent at that time called Parak, lay ahead of them, most of his soldiers drowned in it. The troops of Sulṭān Ahmed Mīrzā suffered one of the worst defeats. Being
