He then invited Yunus Khān while the latter was camping in Khorasan and Iraq. He organized a big feast in Yunus's honour and even offered a long-term friendship. Yunus was proclaimed as the Khān of Moghūls. The relationship between Yunus and Esen had started to become better, for the latter was proclaimed as the Khān of the Moghūls. This had annoyed the Sagharichi Tumen Begs. They barged into the Moghūlistan fuming with anger against Esen.

But Yunus again proved his smarts. He went to them and took Aisan Daulat Begum as his wife.[13] She was the daughter of Mir Sher Ali Haji Kunji (Qunchin) Beg, the chief of Sagharichi Tumen Begs. This alliance gave enough benefits to Yunus. They raised him to the Khānship.

Abu Sa'id kept Mihr Nigar Khānum for his eldest son Sulṭān Ahmad Mīrzā. She never bore any child. Babur recalls that in the throneless era (AD 1499), she was taken away by Shaybāni Khān. But soon she was given talaq as Shaybāni lusted for Mihr Nigar Khānum's niece, Khānzada Begum, Babur's sister. She left Samarkand for Khorasan with Shah Begum, Yunus Khān's second wife in AD 1501–02. Then in AD 1505, both reached Kābul to meet Babur.

In that period, Shaybāni Khān was fighting Nasir Mīrzā at Kandahar. Babur set out for Lamghan in AD 1507–08. While he was doing so Mihr Nigar Khānum and Shah Begum went to Badakhshan escorted by Mīrzā Wais Khān. Mubarak Shah invited Mīrzā Khān to the Victory Fort on the banks of river Kokcha. The marauders of Mīrzā Abu Bakr Dughlat captured Mīrzā Khān along with Mubarak Shah, his wives and his people along with their families.

Qutlugh Nigar Khānum, Babur's mother was the second daughter of Yunus Khān and the eldest half-sister of Sulṭān Mahmud Khān and Sulṭān Ahmad Khān. She stayed with Babur in most of his guerrilla expeditions and even in his throneless time. She went to Allah's mercy on the day of Muharram of AD 1505, five or six months after Babur captured Kābul.

Khub Nigar Khānum was Yunus Khān's third daughter. She was given to Muhammad Hussain Korkan Dughlat in AD 1493 and bore a son and a daughter. Her daughter Habiba was given to Ubaid Khān. But when Babur captured Bukhara and Samarkand in AD 1511, Habiba stayed back with him. Sulṭān Muhammad Dughlat, her paternal uncle visited Babur being part of Sulṭān Sa'id's envoy. Habiba joined him and went to Kashghar. Her cousin Sulṭān Sa'id Khān was more than delighted to receive her there.
