She ensured that no one got to know about this move of hers. Just a few years after she had joined her brothers in Tashkent, they gave her to Awiq Sulṭān Juji. He came from Juji Khān's lineage, the eldest son of Ghengis Khān and was the chief of the Aūzbeg Qazaqs. Shaybāni Khān had defeated Nigar's brothers and killed them, taking away Tashkent and Shahrukhiya in AD 1502–03. When a helpless Nigar failed to find a way out, she moved to Awiq Sulṭān in Moghūlistan. She was accompanied by a dozen Moghūl servants to guard her en route. Later, she became the mother of two daughters with Awiq. One daughter was given to Abdullah Quchin and the other to Rashid Sulṭān. Rashid Sulṭān was the son of Sulṭān Sa'id Khān.

Soon after, Awiq died and following the Turkic tradition of yanglik, Nigar was taken by his brother Qasim Khān. He was Khān of the Qazaq horde. It is said that no one kept the Qazaqs in such an orderly manner as Qasim did. Given his rank, he had quite a large army of 3,00,000 men.

When Qasim died, the Khānship went to Tahir, Khānim's stepson. Records state that Tahir was very close to her. Reflecting her appreciation for Tahir's affection, she said, 'Although you are [as] my child, and I neither think of, nor desire any son but you, yet I wish you to take me to my nephew, Sulṭān Sa'id Khān. For I am grown old, and I have no longer the strength to bear this wandering life in the deserts of Aūzbegistan. Take me where I may enjoy some quiet and repose.'[*]

She then offered to mediate for him and to obtain the support of the Moghūl Khagans against his foes. Taking into consideration the affection and commitments of his stepmother, he escorted her to the Moghūl Kashghar at the Moghūlistan borders. Impressed by the affection and care of Tahir, Sa'id did meet Tahir going against the tradition of the Genghis Family.

Daulat Sulṭān Khānim was the youngest child of Yunus Khān. It was during the Shaybāni Khān's Tashkent campaign of AD 1503 that she was forcefully taken as a concubine of his son, Timur Sulṭān. She became the mother of a daughter with Timur. Babur mentions that Daulat and her daughter got out of Samarkand with him in AD 1512 and took a long stay in Badakhshan. In AD 1520 she made it to her nephew Sa'id Khān in Kashghar.