Gate and went to Samarkand to serve Sulṭān Ahmad Mīrzā. When Chir was falling, he was stationed in Aūrā-tīpā, which Umar Shaikh passed through on his way to Samarkand, following which he again chose to join Umar.

The generous Umar Mīrzā again gave him the command of Andijān. After serving Umar for quite some time he went on to join Sulṭān Mahmud Khān in Tashkent. He was given the acute responsibility for the guardianship of Wais Mīrzā and taking care of the city of Dizak. Babur mentions that by the time he had taken Kābul in AD 1504, Hafiz had made his way to Mecca, routing it through Hind. From then onwards he dedicated his whole life to the service of Allah and Islam till death touched his fate. He was known to be a simple person without any wicked sense.

Khwaja Husain Beg was another Amir of Umar Shaikh's. He was a well-mannered and a humble person. The records say that during alcohol festivities, he was able to improvise the gatherings with dance and music.

Shaikh Mazid Beg was one of the most important Amirs of Umar Shaikh. He was the first guardian of Babur and was excellent at running the administration. Babur found him to be one of the greatest Begs working for Umar Shaikh. But at the same time, he also mentioned his vicious nature and fondness for catamites. He was known to have served for Abul-Qasim Babur Mīrzā.

Abul-Qasim Babur Mīrzā was a Tīmūrid ruler in Khurāsān who reigned between AD 1449 and AD 1457. He was the great-grandson of Timur and the son of Ghiyath-ud-din Baysunghur ibn Shahrukh Mīrzā. Most of the people connected with studies of Tīmūrid history would be aware of the famous succession struggle that happened in the last years of Shahrukh. Babur* was one of those involved in that struggle. He allied with the great-great-grandson of Timur Khalil Sulṭān. Together with Khalil, he plundered the army's baggage train and then made his way to Khurāsān. In AD 1488, Ulugh Beg also invaded Khurāsān to defeat Ala al-Dawla Mīrzā, who held Herat. Ulugh Beg defeated him at Tarnab and took Mashhad. In the meantime, his son Abdal-Latif Mīrzā conquered Herat. Ala al-Dawla Mīrzā fled to south-west Afghanistan. But Ulugh Beg considered Transoxiana to be more important and he left Khurāsān and Mashhad. Perhaps he had such a perception because he had ruled Transoxiana for decades. But things were not going to be so rosy for him. While returning, Babur's forces inflicted deep losses on his army. The cunning Babur saw the power vacuum in
