almonds and pistachios. He did care to send a part of the gift to Babur through an envoy led by Abdul Qadus Beg.

Babur postulated that this envoy was sent to initiate a friendly relationship with Hasan, to make him look at Sultān Mahmud even for the rule of Andijān. But as an action, Hasan returned the envoy with no deliberations towards the intended proposal. But within half a year from then, he had begun to behave quite unusual and ill with people who cared and stood for Babur. Once it even began to appear that Hasan would dismiss the rulership of Babur and elevate Jahangir Mīrzā instead. Gradually, his intentions appeared very much known to the body of begs and the soldiers.

Looking at the upcoming threat Khwaja-i-qazi and Qasim Quchin accompanied by Ali-Dost Taghai met Babur's grandmother, Aisan Daulat Begum in the presence of other well-wishers. The meeting concluded with the decision to give quietus to Hasan for disloyalty by his deposition.

Babur's grandmother was a strong woman, and, in Babur's eyes, none could have matched her strength of perfect judgement and counsel. She was said to be very wise and far-sighted. Almost all affairs related to Babur were dealt with by her advice.

That day, Aisan's and Babur's mother was in the gatehouse of the stone fort and Hasan was in the citadel. With the intent to materialize the decision, Babur went to the citadel only to realize that Hasan had probably gone out for falconry. But the news reached him on the way, and he headed for Samarkand.

All the Hasan-sympathizer begs were arrested and the control of Babur's Gate was given to Qasim.

Soon the news reached Babur that on his way to Samarkand, Hasan had reached Kand-i-Badam. From there he went near the Khuqan sub-division with ill intentions to capture Akhsi. Without wasting any time, Babur sent out several begs and brave soldiers to counter him. Hasan with his men attacked the party sent by Babur in the night while they rested. But fortune was not ready to stand by Hasan. He was hit by an arrow from one of his men.

Now, the tide of time had begun to turn a bit for Babur, but this fortune didn't last too long for the chessboard king.
