He was not going to take it so easy.

Soon, news of him nearing Ḥisār reached Sulṭān Masud. Masud decided to leave his fort and take refuge in Kam Rud Valley. He travelled through Sara-Taq to his younger brother, Baysonghor Sulṭān Mīrzā put up in Samarkand. On the other hand, Wali was already heading towards Khutlan. Baqi Changhaniani, Mahmud Barlas and Quch Beg's father supporting Sulṭān Ahmad had reinforced the fort of Ḥisār. Hamza Sulṭān and Mandi Sulṭān (Aūzbeg) with all his Aūzbegs left for Qara Tigin. It has to be noted that Mahdi was once an aide of Shaybāni Khān, but later came to join the service of Sulṭān Mahmud Mīrzā. They were supported by Muhammad Dughlat, Sulṭān Hussain Dughlat and other Moghūls in Ḥisār.

Sulṭān Husayn Mīrzā sent Abul Mushin Mīrzā after Sulṭān Masud up in Kam Rud Valley. But Mīrzā Beg's sword was awaiting him.

Now, Sulṭān Husayn Mīrzā sent Ibrahim Tarkhān an Yaqyub-i-Ayub. They fought bravely and overtook the Sulṭāns. The Mīrzā's detachment was defeated badly and most of his begs were unhorsed, though all of them were allowed to go free.

After the exodus, Hamza Sulṭān along with his son Mamaq Sulṭān, and Sulṭān, Muhammad Dughlat along with his brother Sulṭān Hussain Dughlat came to see Babur. They were also accompanied by the Aūzbegs and Moghūls who had been dependent on the Sulṭān and Sulṭān Mahmud Mīrzā's retainers. They waited for Babur the whole month of Ramzan (AD 1496) being put at Andijān.

And then Babur came to see them. He reciprocated the custom of Timuriya Sulṭāns and accordingly sat on a raised seat popularly known as tushak. Haza Sulṭān and Mamaq Sulṭān came inside the tent of Babur. The humble Babur rose from his tushak and went down to receive them with honour. They spoke with their eyes for some time. Perhaps, the emotion of old familial ties had sprouted in them. Babur made them sit to his right. Several Moghūls had come too, who were to now remain in service of Babur.
