his son Badi', but tension remained between the two. In AD 1499, Badi' besieged Herat.

Husayn died in AD 1506, and Badi took the throne, but this was not going to be so welcoming. He quickly became embroiled in a conflict with his brother Muzaffar Husain. During this, the Uzbeks under Muhammad Shaybāni were threatening Badi. Babur had begun to march from Kābul to assist Husayn. He arrived in Herat and heard the news of Husayn's death. But he stayed there for a while with the hope of reinforcing things. But he noted his brothers' weakness and left without battling the Uzbeks. The very next year, the Uzbeks captured Herat. This ended Tīmūrid rule there, and the brothers fled. Muzaffar died shortly after. Badi' went to Kandahar to muster forces and marched against the Uzbeks but was defeated. He then came to the court of Ismail I of Persia, where he was given lands surrounding Tabriz and 3650 gold shorafins a year. He helped influence Ismail's decision to undertake an expedition against the Uzbeks in AD 1510. Badi stayed at Tabriz for seven years until it was conquered by Ottoman Sultān Selim I, at which point he travelled to Istanbul, where he died during the plague in AD 1514.

Babur's Narrative Resumes

He dismounted down the Kunduz River. Khushraw Shah arrayed the men with whatever he had and marched to give a good fight to those who arrived. On the way, he halted for a night with his men before finally getting on to Mīrzā's men. His army consisted of around 4000 to 5000 men.

Badi-'al-Zaman Mīrzā marched out from that camp. He made a halt as soon as he reached the Alghu Mountain located in Taloqan. Khusrau Shah in Kunduz sent his brother Wali with serviceable men to Ishkamish, and hilly regions around the Taloqan to induce a sense of turbulence in the mind of Mīrzā.

Muhibb-'Ali, Wali's armourer, came down and met with Mīrzā's men. The assault began. He chopped a few heads, unhorsed some and was able to run away. In the meantime, doorkeeper Sayyid Ali, his younger brother, Quli Beg and Bihlul-i-Ayub along with a few reliable men tried to grip the Khurasanis on the skirt of 'Ambar Koh. But many Khurasanis retaliated with force. Sayyid 'Ali, Quli Beg and the group lost it completely then.