As the news reached Sulṭān Husayn Mīrzā, his army was already distressed because of the Ḥisār spring rains. Mīrzā finally decided about the peace. Mahmud Barlas came out from among those in the fort. Everyone—musicians, commanders and so on—had assembled. Sulṭān Husayn Mīrzā took the eldest daughter of Sulṭān Mahmud Mīrzā, Bega begum for Haidar Mīrzā. Husayn Mīrzā then set his eyes on Kunduz.

At Kunduz, Husayn Mīrzā had begun to get trenches made and was all set to besiege the place. But Badi-‘al-Zaman Mīrzā intervened, and peace was made. Prisoners were exchanged and the Khurasanis retired. This was the second attack of Husayn Mīrzā on Khusrau Shah. Last, he had done it in AD 1490. He had to retire in both cases as campaigns were unsuccessful. This had given Khusrau Shah enough chance to rise much beyond his province.

When the Mīrzā reached Balkh, he made two important decisions in the interests of Mawara al-Nahr. He gave it to Badi-‘al-Zaman Mīrzā. He gave Badi-‘al-Zaman’s district of Astarabad to his son Muzaffar Husayn Mīrzā. In the same assembly, both Badi-‘al-Zaman and Muzaffar were made to kneel to accept Mīrzā’s ruling. This had offended Badi-‘al-Zaman, following which a long rebellion occurred for a couple of years.

Revolt of the Tarkhānis in Samarkand

In the same year, in the month of Ramzan, the Tarkhānis revolted in Samarkand. Badi-‘al-Zaman Mīrzā was not so familiar with the begs and soldiers of Samarkand as he was with those of Ḥisār.

Shaikh Abdullah Barlas was one of his favourite begs. His relationship with Shaikh’s sons was intimate and that of the lover and beloved. These things displeased the Tarkhāns and the Samarkand begs. Darwesh Muhammad Tarkhān went from Bukhara to Qarshi and brought Sulṭān Ali Mīrzā to Samarkand. He made enough effort to raise Ali Mīrzā to be supreme.

Once people congregated in the New Garden where Sulṭān Baysonqor Mīrzā was. He was treated like a prisoner and dragged to the citadel, where Both Mīrzās were seated. One was to decide the fate of the other. Ali Mīrzā was determined to send Sulṭān Baysonqor Mīrzā to the Guk Sarai. But