Baysonqor Mīrzā pleaded and was finally sent to the palace buildings on the east side of the Bustan Sarai.

By then, the gateway leading out to the back had been bricked up for they broke down the obstacle at once. Mīrzā had got out of the citadel on the Kafshir end through the water conduit. He dropped himself from the waterway and went to Khwajaki Khwaja's house in Khwaja Kafshir.

After waiting for long at the door, Tarkhānis and begs barged in but found him long gone. But the Tarkhānis were not going to keep it easy. The next day they went to the gate of the Khwajaki Khwaja, but Khwaja did not give away Mīrzā.

Khwaja was so dignified that they could not even force things on him.

The atmosphere soon turned hostile. Just a few days later, Khwaja Abu'l-Makaram Ahmad Haji Beg and other begs, great and small, soldiers and townsmen, all rose in a mass. They fetched the Mīrzā away from the Khwaja's house and besieged Sulṭān Ali Mīrzā and the Tarkhāns in the citadel. But they could not hold out for even a day; Muhamad Mazid Tarkhān went off through the Gate of the Four Roads for Bukhara. Sulṭān Ali Mīrzā and Darwesh Muhammad Tarkhān were made prisoners.

Darwesh Muhammad Tarkhān was brought in when Baysonqor Mīrzā was confined to Ahmad Haji Beg's house. Baysonqor Mīrzā posed a few questions but got no good answers. Orders were given to execute Darwesh. It is said that in his helplessness, he grasped a column of the house, desperately pleading for mercy. But nothing and only doom was set to come his way. Pleadings brought no help. Sulṭān Ali Mīrzā was pushed to Guk Sarai.[1] There, thin sticks of fire were drawn across his eyes.

Interestingly, he suffered no harm when the fire sticks were drawn in his eyes. Mīrzā did not reveal it at all and went to the Khwaja Yahya's house and a few days later, to the Tarkhāns in Bukhara.

These occurrences were changing things faster. Khwaja Ubaidullah's elder son Khwajaki Khwaja became the spiritual guide of the elder prince, his younger son Yahya became the guide to the youngest prince.

In a few days, Khwaja Yahya followed Sulṭān Ali Mīrzā to Bukhara. Baysonqor Mīrzā unleashed his army against Bukhara. As he approached, Sulṭān Ali Mīrzā arrayed his troops to battle Baysonqor Mīrzā. A small battle took place, which saw Baysonqor Mīrzā being defeated against the
