But to Babur's surprise, Auzun Hasan took a stand against his will. Babur called Auzun a traitor and alleged him for having stirred up a situation of revolt in Andijān of which each one including Sulṭān Ahmad Tambal had become a part.

All along his campaign to Samarkand, Babur had not taken support of his uncle, Sulṭān Mahmud Khān. But now, in the perturbing situation that had arisen, he sought his support and in return, Mahmud cunningly put his eyes on Andijān.

On the other hand, Auzun Hasan and Sulṭān Ahmad Tambal had begun to scheme to capture Andijān and Akhsi for Babur's brother Jahangir Mīrzā. Somehow Babur was not at all convinced that those two districts be given to his younger brother. He mentions the following two reasons why it should not be given:

a)Although not promised to Sulṭān Mahmud Khān, he had asked for them and, as he persisted in asking, an agreement with him was necessary, if they were to be given to Jahangir Mīrzā.

b) Babur feared that since the deserters had fled from Samarkand to join in Andijān, a revolt was on the plate.

Perhaps Babur's fear of revolt was quite genuine as he was in no position to control it if ever it happened in that period. By then all his Moghūl warriors and close ones had retired to Andijān. He was left with only a thousand men, and he certainly did not trust all of them. And all the most trusted ones, taking advantage of goodwill had run home.

When Auzun Hasan and Sulṭān Ahmad Tambal were denied what they wanted, they indeed invited all the dissenters to join them. Those dissenters against Babur's fear denied any support and hostilities became inevitable.

Dejected, Auzun Hasan and Ahmad Tambal led their army from Akhsi against Andijān.

While the hostilities seemed inevitable, Babur reached his closest aide, Tulun Khwaja. He was a bold, dashing and brave lad from Barin. Babur's father had showered abundant favours on him in the past, and Babur too had continued with same. It was Babur who raised Tulun to the rank of beg. According to Babur, he was one of the most deserving Moghūls of that