Moghūls Rebel

Some time had passed since Babur had got back Andijān. Things were normalizing at a fast pace. Babur had come to terms with Auzun Hasan and had allowed him to reach Ḥisār via the Qara-Tigin road without being hurt. Although Auzun's retainers had to choose to follow him, most of them chose to stay back in Andijān.

The irony is that they were the same people who had once plundered the Muslims who were dependent on Babur and Khwaja during Babur's throneless era. But the begs of Babur were not very pleased with them staying back and the following position was arrived at in the court:[*]

> This very band has been the captors and plunderers of our faithful Musalman dependents; what loyalty have they shown to their own (Moghūl) begs that they should be loyal to us? If we had them seized and stripped bare, where would be wrong? And this especially because they might be going about before our very eyes, riding our horses, wearing our coats, eating our sheep. Who could put up with that? If out of humanity, they are not imprisoned and not plundered, they certainly ought to take it as a favor if they get off with the order to give back to our companions of the hard guerilla times, whatever goods of theirs are known to be here.

Babur found it to be a reasonable call. He ordered his men to take whatever they had. However, Babur later claimed that he realized that this order of stripping the Moghūl begs bare was a hasty call of the court and should have been avoided.

Jahangir who had been now sitting beside Babur had fear in his eyes. Of course, he feared meeting nasty consequences as seen by Auzun's men.

Babur asserts in the Baburnama:[*]

> In conquest and government, though many things may have an outside appearance of reason and justice, yet hundreds of thousands of reflections are right and necessary as to the bearings of each one of them. From this single incautious order of ours, what troubles! what rebellions arose! In the end, this same ill-considered order was the cause of our second exile from Andijān.
