THE SEED FOR THIS BOOK was sown by Minoo R. Shroff, Chairman of The A.D. Shroff Memorial Trust, Mumbai, when he asked me some three years ago if I was interested in writing a book on the history of banking in India. His idea was to showcase the achievements of a few important banking personalities, including his uncle A.D. Shroff. I knew nothing of banking or banking history at the time, and was understandably hesitant about accepting his offer. (I still know nothing of banking, and only slightly more of banking history, and trust me this is no Socratic preface of ironic modesty.)

My interest in history and biography, and the chance to learn more about a subject which would have otherwise remained unexplored, led me to consider the offer. Aware of the challenges involved, I nevertheless accepted his offer and have spent a happy three years in the company of Sir Sorabji Pochkhanawala, Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, Sir C.D. Deshmukh, R.K. Talwar, A.D. Shroff, and H.T. Parekh the ‘barons’ of this particular banking history. Researching and writing this book has been an arduous task but it has also been an enormously rewarding one. Writing history involves organizing masses of facts into a coherent story and communicating the results in a manner which will interest more people than just the writer. Thus, while writing may be a solitary activity, the publication of a book such as this must remain a collaborative effort. My efforts have received support from a variety of people and institutions, and it gives me great pleasure in acknowledging their assistance.
