It is said that it takes a whole village to raise a child. It is the same for a book. My first acknowledgement goes to Minoo R. Shroff and his entire team both at the Trust and at the Forum of Free Enterprise who have been most supportive in every way. Minoo R. Shroff, with energy and enthusiasm which belie his octogenarian status, read my drafts and offered valuable suggestions and warm encouragement. It was a pleasure to discuss the book with him and listen to his fascinating anecdotes and stories of the financial world, including some involving the 'barons' of this book. I hope he takes my suggestion of writing his memoirs seriously. And of course, he remains the ultimate authority on his uncle A.D. Shroff. I cannot thank him enough for affording me this opportunity for intellectual invigoration.

S. Divakara, Director General of the Forum, has been a pillar of support from the very start. He and his colleagues, Swati Kapadia and Zenobia Kalapesi, smoothed the way for me in various ways. Whether it was contacting persons for interviews or providing research material and books, Divakara and his co-workers were a constant support. It has been a pleasure to work with them on this book. I also acknowledge the contribution of Kiran Misra, who assisted me in my research and whose diligent work and intelligent sleuthing at libraries, was of immense help.

Inevitably, a book such as this with its emphasis on research, must owe a heavy debt to libraries and archives. I would like to thank the Mumbai University Library; the F.E. Dinshaw Commercial and Financial Library; the A.A. Jasdenwala Library of the Cricket Club of India; the Nehru Memorial Museum and Library, New Delhi; and the State Bank of India Library, Mumbai. My biggest debt however is to the RBI Library, Mumbai, which provided the majority of books, reports, and articles which I have used in the researching and writing of this book. This brings me to a key player whose assistance has been inestimable and whose generosity to me was boundless: Rajiv Ranjan, my friend of many years, and a senior officer with the RBI, provided me with books, reports, and articles with amazing dispatch over many months. I had only to SMS or email my wish-list, and the material was ready for delivery within a few days (and in many cases on the same day itself). When the RBI library was unable to provide what I wanted, he cast around in other libraries and institutions, and ensured that he got it for me. The facility of being provided material on tap is best appreciated by those who have had to encounter delay and frustration due to
