Morgenthau's determination to concentrate financial power in Washington.'[14]

The Indian Delegation at Bretton Woods

The Indian delegation at Bretton Woods was led by Sir Jeremy Raisman, who was ably assisted by Deshmukh. The other British Indian delegate was Sir Theodore Gregory. Deshmukh and Sir Theodore attended meetings of Committees 3 and 4 of Commission I. The two non-official Indian delegates were: Sir Shanmukham Chetty who went on to become India's first Finance Minister, and A.D. Shroff, at the time a Director of Tata Sons Ltd. Dr B.K. Madan, then Director of Research, RBI, and later an Executive Director of the IMF was the Secretary of the delegation, and Sir David Meek, Indian Trade Commissioner in London was the Adviser.

As the leader, Raisman's first task had been to select the other members of the delegation. This was something which he accomplished admirably with merit and suitability being the only criteria for selection. It was a fine blend of financial and economic expertise, official and non-official, as well as British and Indian elements. Deshmukh as RBI Governor and Gregory as an economist of repute selected themselves. Shanmukham Chetty had been a member of several British Indian delegations to international conferences and had also been Dewan of Cochin State. Shroff was a noted economist and stockbroker renowned for his deep knowledge and fearless outspokenness. The Indian delegation at Bretton Woods was small (6) in comparison with other delegations like China (9), the United Kingdom (7), and the United States (12).

As the meetings progressed, a large degree of specialized representation developed and Deshmukh and Gregory attended meetings of Committee 3 and 4 of Commission I, which were concerned with organization and management, and form and status, respectively, of the Fund. Later, the Committees of Commission II functioned at the same time as those of Commission I, and Deshmukh generally represented the Indian delegation on the Committees of Commission II constituted to study the setting up of the Reconstruction and Development Bank, while the rest of the delegation attended meetings of Commission I.[15]