> painstaking care, the solidity and stability of the State Bank, which have always been its hallmark.’[31]

Ghosh says that had he not been one of Talwar’s successors, he would not have been able to appreciate the enormous significance of what he had done for the bank. ‘In the mid-Eighties, when I took over as Chairman of the bank I realized, within a very short time, that all I needed to do was to build on the solid foundation laid by him.’[32]
