World Bank in the promotion of ICICI and its sustained support, ICICI never lacked foreign exchange resources for lending. The World Bank continued to provide foreign currency lines of credit one after the other, as required. The individual line of credit which, to start with, was US $10 million, became larger over the years and ICICI's eleventh line of credit, negotiated in 1975, was for US $100 million. The total of twelve lines of credit from the World Bank at that time amounted to US $515 million (about ₹415 crores). Thus, about half of the total resources available to ICICI for industrial assistance came from the World Bank. In addition, external funds were provided by the West German development agency, KfW, in seventeen successive lines of credit of DM 144.5 million (about ₹68 crores). Further resources were granted by the British Government totaling £18 million (about ₹30 crores), and a line of credit by the USAID for US $5 million (about ₹4 crores).[39] An intangible gain to ICICI was that the quality of its operations and the technical efficiency of its appraisals improved as a result of the interaction with the World Bank.

Even more than foreign currency resources, ICICI needed rupee resources to effectively extend its field of activity. However, ICICI had limitations in borrowing rupee funds on a sustained basis. It required a trustee status for its bonds (i.e. bonds guaranteed by government) which it did not enjoy at first. When ICICI borrowed from the World Bank, that was ipso facto guaranteed by the Government of India as required under the charter of the World Bank. The Government of India, therefore, took a helpful view and agreed to provide its guarantee for the rupee bond issues of ICICI. This paved the way for ICICI to borrow from the market on a regular basis and in increasing amounts. Till the end of 1979, ICICI had obtained four rupee loans from the government, raised six bond issues without guarantee and eight issues with guarantee, totaling about ₹252 crores. It also obtained ₹35 crores under the Soft Loan Scheme from IDBI.

ICICI was also successful in tapping the international capital market. In 1973, it was able to make a small public issue in the Swiss market. It also raised a syndicated Euro-dollar loan for US $20 million. With its ability to mobilize substantial funds from different sources as borrowings, ICICI had to keep increasing its equity capital to maintain a debt-equity ratio appropriate for a development bank. From its equity base of ₹5 crores, the equity capital was gradually brought up to ₹22.50 crores by successive
