‘responsible’ government was directed to the provinces and not to the centre. It is noteworthy that by 1934 Attlee himself had become committed to the cause of Indian Independence. He did not think Britain could provide India with the constitutional reforms it needed. It should have, he believed, dominion status within the British Empire. As Prime Minister he eventually saw India gain Independence, but at a grave cost to India itself.