and “terrorists”’, and in this way, ‘the British sought to dismiss their non-violent demands for rights as “political prisoners”’.[16] At the end of the trial, both men were sentenced to transportation for life when the Delhi sessions judge, Leonard Middleton, gave his forty-one-page judgment a week later on 12 June 1929. There was then an appeal to the Punjab High Court in Lahore. This was heard before Justices Sir Cecil Forde and James Addison.