(1) Bhagat Singh was arrested on 8 April 1929. His trial before a regular magistrate, Rai Sahib Pandit Sri Kishen Kapur, began on 10 July 1929 and ran for ten months. But by 3 October 1929, and three months into the trial, his lawyer, Amolak Ram Kapur, was already complaining of the unfairness of (i) the pardoned ‘approvers’ being kept in police custody, where they could be tutored by the police, rather than judicial custody, such that this ‘will defeat the ends of justice’; (ii) that the accused on the other hand are not allowed ‘access to their relatives, friends and legal advisers’ even ‘when the High Court rules that those facilities should be afforded’, because ‘some obstacles were still put in their way’; and (iii) that with four months now gone the approvers ‘should be kept in judicial lock-up pending the inquiry and the trial’ (Lahore Archives, previously unpublished).
