1930. This was that ‘Ordinance No. III of 1930 is to provide specially for the trial of the accused . . .’ in this case. Under Section 11 of that ordinance, ‘the High Court has no jurisdiction in respect of any proceeding under it’. Moreover that, ‘the forbidding of interviews by jail authorities does not seem to have much to do with the trial of the accused’. This is quite simply wrong, because the preparation of one’s defence in one’s own trial is part of the proceedings before the court, and it cannot be otherwise. In fact, the folly of this adopted position is made clear when the writer of the same document goes on to say that ‘I should say that on the whole that it is not a proceeding under the Ordinance unless of course the jail authorities were directed’ to make interviews available. This is sophisticated casuistry that bears no relation to the facts on the ground and serves only to undermine the requirements of due process and natural justice which are so integral to the rule of law (Lahore Archives, previously unpublished).
