Chapter 37

1. Much is owed by the author in this Part Seven to Dr Chris Moffat's penetrating evaluation of how Bhagat Singh's thinking is to be interpreted. See Chris Moffat, India's Revolutionary Inheritance (Cambridge University Press, 2019), Chapters 2 and 4.
2. Bipan Chandra, 'The Ideological Development of the Revolutionary Terrorists of Northern India in the 1920s', Nationalism and Colonialism in Modern India, (Hyderabad: Orient Longman, 1979, pp. 223-251) p. 167.
3. Times of India, 22 September 2010.
4. Chris Moffat, India's Revolutionary Inheritance (Cambridge University Press, 2019), p. 148.
5. Ibid., p. 148.
6. Ibid., p. 154.
7. Ibid., p. 150.
8. Ibid., p. 151.
9. Ibid., p. 150.
10. Cited by Moffat at p. 151.
11. Mima v. Singh (2002) 186 ALR 393 (at paras 64–67, esp. para 67).
12. J. Callinan (dissenting), para 167.
13. See, Mr Gleeson CJ Kirby in Mima v. Singh (2002) 186 ALR 393, para 21.
14. See, Ibid., para 16.
15. See, Ibid., para 18.
16. Frantz Fanon, The Wretched of the Earth (Penguin Classics, 2001), pp. 27–84.
17. Ibid., p. 27.
18. Ibid., pp. 27–28.
19. See, 'Young India', 2 January 1930, in Collected Works of Mahatma Gandhi, Vol. XLII, pp. 361–64.
20. Thus, 'In its first twenty years, known as a "moderate phase", Congress was not interested in campaigning for independence or self-rule but for greater political autonomy within empire.' 'Making Britain: Discover How South Asians Shaped the Nation', 1870-1 (Available at https://www.open.ac.uk/researchprojects/makingbritain/content/indian-national-congress). Perhaps the reason for this is that, as Jona Aravind Dohrmann points out, 'This is probably the only instance in modern