bestowed on someone as a mark of honour. He is the maternal grandfather of Simranjit Singh Mann, who is the president of the Shiromani Akali Dal, Punjab's Sikh political party, having twice also been a member of Parliament. He too has demanded that the British government atone for the actions of General Dyer in 1919. One of the most glamorous of Sikh maharajas was from the existing Royal House of Patiala, by the name of Maharaja Bhupinder Singh, and he was indeed a close friend of Lieutenant-Governor O'Dwyer, often wining and dining with him. After the Jallianwala Bagh Massacre, he visited O'Dwyer at London's Caxton Hall, where eventually in 1934 Shaheed Udham Singh was to assassinate him in an effort to avenge the 1919 massacre. Captain Amrinder Singh, erstwhile chief minister of Punjab, is his grandson and also a person seeking recompense for past imperial atrocities.

Chapter 49

1. What he had said in the debate in Parliament on that occasion was, 'However we may dwell upon the difficulties of General Dyer during the Amritsar riots, upon the anxious and critical situation in the Punjab, upon the danger to Europeans throughout that province, upon the long delays which have taken place in reaching a decision about this officer, upon the procedure that was at this point or at that point adopted, however we may dwell upon all this, one tremendous fact stands out – I mean the slaughter of nearly 400 persons and the wounding of probably three to four times as many, at the Jallian Wallah Bagh on 13th April. That is an episode which appears to me to be without precedent or parallel in the modern history of the British Empire. It is an event of an entirely different order from any of those tragical occurrences which take place when troops are brought into collision with the civil population. It is an extraordinary event, a monstrous event, an event which stands in singular and sinister isolation.'
