. As Afzal Husain notes, Bayazid lists eleven members of Shamsuddin's family in Humayun's entourage when he came to India but Abul Fazl doesn't mention even one. This might be because 'the Atakas as yet held minor positions among nobles and were more or less members of the personal staff of Prince Akbar' – Abul Fazl listed only high-ranking officers, while Bayazid noted 'even menial servants' (Husain, The Nobility under Akbar and Jahangir).

. Ali Quli and his brother Bahadur, along with their father Haider Sultan Shaibani, had joined Humayun during his Persian exile (Husain, The Nobility Under Akbar and Jahangir). Their lineage was as exalted as the Chagatais': they were Shaibanid Uzbeks, claiming descent from Chenghiz Khan via Chagatai's elder brother Juchi.
