. Akbar shrugged off their complaints. ‘Every one of you has a Hindu to manage his private affairs,’ he said, according to Badauni. ‘Suppose we too have a Hindu, why should harm come of it?’

. With some tact, it must be said, Akbar renamed the office when he gave it to Muzaffar Khan. Of late, however, writes Iqtidar Alam Khan in his revealing biography of Munim Khan, the khan-khanan had been finding himself pushed out of the spotlight by ‘exceptionally able men’ who were also, for the most part, ‘non-Turani upstarts’ – that is, men who shared neither Munim’s Central Asian ethnicity, nor his Chagatai lineage. Most galling of these promotions would have been that of the Khorasani Muzaffar Khan (Khan, The Political Biography of a Mughal Noble).

. In fact, Ali Quli sent a woman called Agha Sarv-qad to open negotiations. Agha Sarv-qad was ‘a one-time intimate friend’ of Munim’s, writes Iqtidar Alam Khan, and Ali Quli had tasked her with getting the khan-khanan to agree to talks and to spy on his troops. For all Munim Khan’s recent demotions in court, he was an able and experienced soldier and strategist. In turn, therefore, Munim, ‘cleverly using his friendship with the lady’, discovered Ali Quli’s own increasing desire to end hostilities thanks to growing ‘demoralisation’ among his supporters. . Ibid. Badauni declares this inevitable, as the commander hailed from Mashhad, a city known for the arrogance of its people; and quotes a little verse in support of his claim: ‘O men of Mashhad, with the exception of your Imam / May the curse of God rest on each one of you!’ (The eighth imam, Imam Reza, is buried here; and Mashhad is a venerated pilgrimage for Shias.)

. Badauni, Muntakhab-ut-Tawarikh, trans. W.H. Lowe. Again, this owed a great deal to the fact that neither Muizzulmulk nor Todar Mal were Turani, unlike Munim Khan.

. ‘Khan-khanan [Munim Khan], with the assistance of Mir Abdul Latif, Mulla Abdulla Makhdum-ul Mulk, who was Shaikh-ul Islam of Hind, and Shaikh Abdu-n Nabi the Sadr, again made intercession for Khan-zaman and the Emperor, in his great kindness, once more pardoned his offences’ (Nizamuddin Ahmad, Tabakat-i Akbari). Two of these men, Makhdum-ul-Mulk and Abdun Nabi, would suffer the fate of the Uzbeks themselves, one day.
