. 'When Babur arrived' in Hindustan, writes Michael H. Fisher, 'a substantial minority of people living in South Asia were Muslims: some were immigrants and their descendants, but most were converts . . . Some prominent converts later claimed biological descent from the Prophet Muhammad or another revered Arab, boasting honorifics like Sayyid or Shaikh, despite their Indic biological ancestry.' These would be the 'Shaikhzadas' – literally 'sons of Shaikhs'. 'Indian Muslims' also comprised 'settled Indo-Afghans'. See Fisher, A Short History of the Mughal Empire.
