2018). Or, as Abul Fazl puts it, ‘A separate volume would be required to describe the intuition into mysteries of the “gift of God”.’

. The Akbarnama of Abu’l Fazl, vol. 3. This and the descriptions of Akbar’s miracles that follow are based on Abul Fazl’s accounts.

. As Abul Fazl puts it, the deer’s trust was a natural consequence of Akbar’s ‘graciousness and kindness’, which not only attracted people of ‘various sects and ethnic groups [to] gird their loins in [his] service’, but made even wild animals ‘calm and tame’ in his presence. I’m quoting from Thackston’s translation (Abu’l Fazl, The History of Akbar, vol. 5); Beveridge is so disgusted with Abul Fazl’s ‘rhapsody’, as he calls it, that he only offers a summary of it.

. ‘From early youth, in compliment to his wives, the daughters of Rajahs of Hind, he had within the female apartments continued to offer the hom, which is a ceremony derived from sun-worship’ (Badauni, Muntakhab-ut-Tawarikh, trans. W.H. Lowe).

. Lt-Col. James Tod, Annals and Antiquities of Rajasthan, or the Central and Western Rajput States of India, vol. 1, ed. William Crooke (Oxford University Press, 1920).

. Rana Pratap’s descendants, writes James Tod, ‘cherish a recollection of the deeds of their forefathers, and melt, as they recite them, into manly tears’ – and few of the colonel’s readers will doubt that he, too, left such recitations with wet eyes. See Tod, Annals and Antiquities of Rajasthan, or the Central and Western Rajput States of India, vol. 1.

. Harkha Bai was Man Singh’s aunt, not his sister. The error may be a slip of Tod’s agitated pen. Man Singh’s sister would marry a ‘Turk’ who was also her cousin, Akbar’s eldest son, Salim.

. Allison Busch, ‘Portrait of a Raja in a Badshah’s World: Amrit Rai’s Biography of Man Singh (1585)’, Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient, vol. 55, 2012.

. The poet’s name was Mulla Sheri.

. Busch, ‘Portrait of a Raja in a Badshah’s World’.

. Badauni, Muntakhab-ut-Tawarikh, trans. W.H. Lowe.