. Described by Faruqui, The Princes of the Mughal Empire: ‘Even if Ni‘matullah Khan Harvi’s Tarikh-i Khan Jahan wa Makhzan-i Afghani (written in the mid-1610s) cannot top the drama of Waqa’i‘ Asad Beg, it more than makes up for it by offering fresh details of the “event”. Thus we now learn that the sword gifted by Akbar to Salim belonged to Babur, who passed it down to Akbar’s father Humayun just prior to his own death. As well as his sword, Akbar also gave Salim his personal rosary and good luck amulets as well as a warm hug and kiss.’
