Kashmir. See Mirza Muhammad Haider Dughlat, The Tarikh-i-Rashidi: A History of the Moghuls of Central Asia, trans. E. Denison Ross, ed. N. Elias (Sampson. Low, Marston & Co., 1895).

. Ibid.

. Abu'l Fazl, The History of Akbar, vol. 1, trans. W.M. Thackston.

. Gulbadan notes here a bit of historical revisionism from within the harem. Humayun's future wife, Hamida Banu Begum, held that the emperor wrote these lines for his brother, Kamran. It is Gulbadan, however, who was at the scene, not Hamida; in the words of her translator, Annette Beveridge,

'Gulbadan puts the difference of opinion gently but does not surrender, and leaves her readers to draw their own inferences.'

. Gulbadan tells this story; I have changed its words somewhat, but kept its meaning. Shaikh Ahmad of Jam (1048–1141) was a celebrated Sufi buried in Torbat-e Jam, Iran. Humayun's mother, Maham, was descended from him, and Humayun's vision was somewhat tautological, therefore. Any child of Humayun's would be of the Persian philosopher's blood.

. She was named Bakshi Banu.

. And most of Lahore with them, it seems. Annette Beveridge writes that 2 lakh men and women are said to have fled the city at news of Sher Shah's approach. See Gulbadan Begum, The History of Humayun.

. The courtier is quoted in Ali Anooshahr, 'The King Who Would Be Man: The Gender Roles of the Warrior King in Early Mughal History', Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, vol. 18, no. 3 (Cambridge University Press, 2008).

. Nizamuddin Ahmad, 'Tabakat-i Akbari', in The History of India, As Told by Its Own Historians, trans. H.M. Elliot, vol. 5 (Trübner and Co., 1873).

. The Akbarnama of Abu'l Fazl, vol. 1.

. Ibid.

. See Annette Beveridge's introduction to Gulbadan Begum, The History of Humayun.

. Ibid. The lines are from Sa'di's Gulistan quoted by Babur in his Baburnama.

. Abu'l Fazl, The History of Akbar, vol. 1, trans. W.M. Thackston.

. Mirza Muhammad Haider Dughlat, The Tarikh-i-Rashidi, trans. E.D. Ross.

. Gulbadan Begum, The History of Humayun.

. Ibid.

. Ibid.

. Ibid.

. Even Gulbadan seems to want to gloss over her brother's disgusted departure, writing that Humayun 'gave Mirza Hindal leave to go'.

. Abul Fazl, for example, writes that Humayun sent two emissaries, Mir Samandar followed by Rai Mal Sauni, to Jodhpur, the raja's capital, and both returned with reports of Maldeo's doubtful loyalty.

. Abul Fazl offers a more favourable perspective on the raja, possibly because, at the time the historian was writing, Marwar was a friendly ally of the Mughal empire. Thus, he writes that Raja Maldeo was 'in the first instance well-intentioned, and desirous of doing service' but that news of Humayun's reduced circumstances coupled with threats from an increasingly powerful Sher Shah, 'diverted [him] from the right path'. Nizamuddin Ahmad is even more sympathetic to the raja's plight, and allows that Humayun's weak army was a serious impediment to Maldeo's loyalty, for the raja did not have 'sufficient forces of his own to withstand Sher Khan'.

. Nizamuddin Ahmad, Tabakat-i Akbari.

. Gulbadan Begum, The History of Humayun.

. Ibid.