Haryana. On 22 April, in a press conference, Deputy Chief Minister of New Delhi Manish Sisodia noted that 'jungle raj' by the governments of UP and Haryana (both BJP-ruled states) was why Delhi was not receiving timely oxygen.[46] He blamed them for blocking and hoarding oxygen which was meant for Delhi. One of Delhi's primary vendors for oxygen supply was Linde India, whose plant is based in Faridabad, Haryana. Sisodia's charges were that the Haryana government was not letting the vendor release the tankers to come to Delhi. However, when media folks spoke with the collector of Faridabad, Dr Garima Mittal, she strongly negated Sisodia's accusations, 'I do not know where this news is coming from. Everything is fine. I don't know about the specific case of the hospital, but there is no issue here. All the tankers are leaving the state, there's no issue at all. Nobody has been stopped. There is absolutely smooth movement as has been going on. Oxygen supply will be as usual.'[47] Only a few hours after her response, Sisodia once again tweeted that supply had been restored.[48]

Even as the hearing was ongoing in Court, on 23 April, top officials of Sir Ganga Ram Hospital announced that 25 patients died because the hospital, which was filled to capacity, had to lower its oxygen flow to even critical patients due to shortage.[49] However, the chairman later announced, 'I would not ascribe the deaths to oxygen shortage. A large number of patients are in serious condition in hospital. But we are facing severe oxygen shortage.'[50] On the same day, even Jaipur Golden Hospital reported 21 deaths due to short supply of oxygen horrifying the country. But later, a committee formed to look into the reason of death of these patients concluded that the deaths which took place were not because of the lack of oxygen but because of 'respiratory failure'.[51] It further added in its report which was submitted to the High Court on 4 May that, 'almost all the patients were already very sick or critical, either from the time of admission or during the course of the hospital stay, even before the evening of April 23'.[52] In their statement to the court, they specifically conveyed their disappointment with the Kejriwal government, 'Yesterday a minister in Delhi Government said hospitals are raising unnecessary SoS. Please tell us, how many hours before deaths start happening should we call them? I was supposed to get 3.6 MT at 5 pm, but I didn't. The Delhi government's bureaucratic department has completely failed; they don't understand the supply chain and disrupt it. Let me deal with my supplier; let them not
