Politics in Australia Since the 1970s

Various economic reforms were brought about between 1983 and 1996 under the Hawke-Keating Labor administration. They endorsed reforms which caused the fluctuation of the dollar and the relaxation of banks. More reforms were established under the new Liberal-National Coalition Governments from the mid-1990s which included extra taxes and industry systems.

The first female Prime Minister was Julia Gillard who was elected in 2010. She had run a successful campaign and won against Kevin Rudd who was the leader of the Labor Party. Tony Abbott won the new election in 2013 but was defeated by Malcolm Turnbull in 2016.
